

S.O.S.
Frequently means
Sure of SERVICE
when you call on us in a baggage-moving emergency.

Many of our patrons who had called on us as a "last resort" in a baggage dilemma, now make it a practice to resort first to the

WESTCOTT EXPRESS COMPANY
NEW YORK
VANDERBILT 4400

No. 2
What I know about COLGATE'S
RIBBON DENTAL CREAM

I know that I could scrape my teeth clean with a soap-less, gritty tooth paste, but I know that washing is safer than scouring.

I know that COLGATE'S is made from non-gritty chalk and pure soap, which will loosen and wash away injurious substances in my mouth.

I know COLGATE'S cleans my teeth thoroughly and that no dentifrice does more.

Charles of London

NEW
EDISON
PHONOGRAPH
Latest improvements. Entirely different from any other phonograph.
Investigate if you intend to buy an instrument.

EDISON SHOP
473 FIFTH AVE.

Dandruff Soon Ruins the Hair

Girls—if you want plenty of thick, beautiful, glossy, silky hair, do by all means get rid of dandruff, for it will starve your hair and ruin it if you don't.

It does no good to try to brush or wash it out. The only sure way to get rid of dandruff is to dissolve it then you destroy it entirely. To do this get about four ounces of ordinary liquid arvon; apply it at night when retiring; use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it in gently with the finger tips.

By morning, most if not all of your dandruff will be gone, and three or four more applications will completely dissolve and entirely destroy every single sign and trace of it.

You will find, too, that all itching and digging of the scalp will stop, and your hair will look and feel a hundred times better. You can get liquid arvon at any drug store. Four ounces is all you will need, no matter how much dandruff you have. This simple remedy never fails.

Say
Ben-Gay
for Sore Throat

Clear your throat of rawness from the outside, in—with

BAUME BENGUE
(ANALOGUE)

It relieves the soreness quickly At any Drug Store—Keep a tube handy Thos. Leeming & Co., N. Y., Amer. Agents

Get the Original
French
Baume

First Aid for ACNES and PAINS

THE REVIEWING STAND

By Alexander Woolcott

Some Moliere.

THIRTY-NINTH STREET THEATRE—
"Le Misanthrope," comedy, in French, by Moliere.
Cecile Sorel Cecile Sorel
Alceste Albert Lambert
Oronte Louis Ravet
Philinte Georges Selter
Clitandre Charles Gerval Climante Fernand Chaplin
Dubois Jacques Papillon
Eliante Mile. Rachel Herond
Arasine Mme. Marans
Blaque Mme. Lieres

Moliere was reached last evening in the festivities by which the Rue de Richelieu is sharing some of its memories with West Thirty-ninth Street.
The bill was "Le Misanthrope," with Cecile Sorel once more gracefully yielding the center of the stage to her associate, Albert Lambert, though one gathered as the evening wore on and Sorel wore clothes more and more fearfully and wonderfully constructed that she was one who cared not who made her country's laws so long as she could wear its gowns. Her own scenic effects put to blush the modest, poor-relation scenery which has been vouchsafed her plays. Indeed, the revival of "Le Misanthrope" last evening of the rubber plant as a form of decoration and a gesture of elegance on the stage.

So here was a Célimène of prodig-

ious head-dresses, vast pinkish plumes
tying stoutly with violent diamant
and earrings that were veritable chandeliers. Here was a very windy display of gowns smothering a Célimène
that, except for a moment or two of amorous languor, was content to posture a good deal and let it go at that.

Of course, the neat, old minute picture of the Moliere comedies is neither a difficult nor an unbecoming gait for any actress so highly artificialized as this old favorite from the Comédie
Française.

Lambert presented an Alceste that was a bit of a shock to those of us who had been brought up in the sedate traditions of the play. Here was no glacial and fastidious Alceste such as the older Gaitty embodied, but a rough hewn, boyish, tempestuous fellow, more bucolic than satiric and giving much the impression of a leman, a good hearty man-from-home nature's noblemen, turned loose in the frigidities of Célimène's little salon.

As he glowered at Oronte one expected
him at any moment to break right through the rice, precise classicism of the verse and cry one in the provincial French, "I don't like that city chap (type de la ville), mother. He ain't done right by our Celimenes."

The Oronte, by the way, was Louis Ravet, an excellent comedian of endless bounce and gusto. This is the second and last week of these strolling French players and they will have run through their repertoire to-night when they add another Moliere play—"Tar-
tuffe."

So here was a Célimène of prodig-

ious head-dresses, vast pinkish plumes
tying stoutly with violent diamant
and earrings that were veritable chan-
deliers. Here was a very windy dis-
play of gowns smothering a Célimène
that, except for a moment or two of
amorous languor, was content to pos-
ture a good deal and let it go at that.

Of course, the neat, old minute pic-
ture of the Moliere comedies is neither a
difficult nor an unbecoming gait for
any actress so highly artificialized as
this old favorite from the Comédie
Française.

As he glowered at Oronte one expected
him at any moment to break right
through the rice, precise classicism of
the verse and cry one in the provincial French, "I don't like that city
chap (type de la ville), mother. He
ain't done right by our Celimenes."

The Oronte, by the way, was Louis
Ravet, an excellent comedian of end-
less bounce and gusto. This is the
second and last week of these strolling
French players and they will have run
through their repertoire to-night when
they add another Moliere play—"Tar-
tuffe."

So here was a Célimène of prodig-

ious head-dresses, vast pinkish plumes
tying stoutly with violent diamant
and earrings that were veritable chan-
deliers. Here was a very windy dis-
play of gowns smothering a Célimène
that, except for a moment or two of
amorous languor, was content to pos-
ture a good deal and let it go at that.

Of course, the neat, old minute pic-
ture of the Moliere comedies is neither a
difficult nor an unbecoming gait for
any actress so highly artificialized as
this old favorite from the Comédie
Française.

As he glowered at Oronte one expected
him at any moment to break right
through the rice, precise classicism of
the verse and cry one in the provincial French, "I don't like that city
chap (type de la ville), mother. He
ain't done right by our Celimenes."

The Oronte, by the way, was Louis
Ravet, an excellent comedian of end-
less bounce and gusto. This is the
second and last week of these strolling
French players and they will have run
through their repertoire to-night when
they add another Moliere play—"Tar-
tuffe."

So here was a Célimène of prodig-

ious head-dresses, vast pinkish plumes
tying stoutly with violent diamant
and earrings that were veritable chan-
deliers. Here was a very windy dis-
play of gowns smothering a Célimène
that, except for a moment or two of
amorous languor, was content to pos-
ture a good deal and let it go at that.

Of course, the neat, old minute pic-
ture of the Moliere comedies is neither a
difficult nor an unbecoming gait for
any actress so highly artificialized as
this old favorite from the Comédie
Française.

As he glowered at Oronte one expected
him at any moment to break right
through the rice, precise classicism of
the verse and cry one in the provincial French, "I don't like that city
chap (type de la ville), mother. He
ain't done right by our Celimenes."

The Oronte, by the way, was Louis
Ravet, an excellent comedian of end-
less bounce and gusto. This is the
second and last week of these strolling
French players and they will have run
through their repertoire to-night when
they add another Moliere play—"Tar-
tuffe."

So here was a Célimène of prodig-

ious head-dresses, vast pinkish plumes
tying stoutly with violent diamant
and earrings that were veritable chan-
deliers. Here was a very windy dis-
play of gowns smothering a Célimène
that, except for a moment or two of
amorous languor, was content to pos-
ture a good deal and let it go at that.

Of course, the neat, old minute pic-
ture of the Moliere comedies is neither a
difficult nor an unbecoming gait for
any actress so highly artificialized as
this old favorite from the Comédie
Française.

As he glowered at Oronte one expected
him at any moment to break right
through the rice, precise classicism of
the verse and cry one in the provincial French, "I don't like that city
chap (type de la ville), mother. He
ain't done right by our Celimenes."

The Oronte, by the way, was Louis
Ravet, an excellent comedian of end-
less bounce and gusto. This is the
second and last week of these strolling
French players and they will have run
through their repertoire to-night when
they add another Moliere play—"Tar-
tuffe."

So here was a Célimène of prodig-

ious head-dresses, vast pinkish plumes
tying stoutly with violent diamant
and earrings that were veritable chan-
deliers. Here was a very windy dis-
play of gowns smothering a Célimène
that, except for a moment or two of
amorous languor, was content to pos-
ture a good deal and let it go at that.

Of course, the neat, old minute pic-
ture of the Moliere comedies is neither a
difficult nor an unbecoming gait for
any actress so highly artificialized as
this old favorite from the Comédie
Française.

As he glowered at Oronte one expected
him at any moment to break right
through the rice, precise classicism of
the verse and cry one in the provincial French, "I don't like that city
chap (type de la ville), mother. He
ain't done right by our Celimenes."

The Oronte, by the way, was Louis
Ravet, an excellent comedian of end-
less bounce and gusto. This is the
second and last week of these strolling
French players and they will have run
through their repertoire to-night when
they add another Moliere play—"Tar-
tuffe."

So here was a Célimène of prodig-

ious head-dresses, vast pinkish plumes
tying stoutly with violent diamant
and earrings that were veritable chan-
deliers. Here was a very windy dis-
play of gowns smothering a Célimène
that, except for a moment or two of
amorous languor, was content to pos-
ture a good deal and let it go at that.

Of course, the neat, old minute pic-
ture of the Moliere comedies is neither a
difficult nor an unbecoming gait for
any actress so highly artificialized as
this old favorite from the Comédie
Française.

As he glowered at Oronte one expected
him at any moment to break right
through the rice, precise classicism of
the verse and cry one in the provincial French, "I don't like that city
chap (type de la ville), mother. He
ain't done right by our Celimenes."

The Oronte, by the way, was Louis
Ravet, an excellent comedian of end-
less bounce and gusto. This is the
second and last week of these strolling
French players and they will have run
through their repertoire to-night when
they add another Moliere play—"Tar-
tuffe."

So here was a Célimène of prodig-

ious head-dresses, vast pinkish plumes
tying stoutly with violent diamant
and earrings that were veritable chan-
deliers. Here was a very windy dis-
play of gowns smothering a Célimène
that, except for a moment or two of
amorous languor, was content to pos-
ture a good deal and let it go at that.

Of course, the neat, old minute pic-
ture of the Moliere comedies is neither a
difficult nor an unbecoming gait for
any actress so highly artificialized as
this old favorite from the Comédie
Française.

As he glowered at Oronte one expected
him at any moment to break right
through the rice, precise classicism of
the verse and cry one in the provincial French, "I don't like that city
chap (type de la ville), mother. He
ain't done right by our Celimenes."

The Oronte, by the way, was Louis
Ravet, an excellent comedian of end-
less bounce and gusto. This is the
second and last week of these strolling
French players and they will have run
through their repertoire to-night when
they add another Moliere play—"Tar-
tuffe."

So here was a Célimène of prodig-

ious head-dresses, vast pinkish plumes
tying stoutly with violent diamant
and earrings that were veritable chan-
deliers. Here was a very windy dis-
play of gowns smothering a Célimène
that, except for a moment or two of
amorous languor, was content to pos-
ture a good deal and let it go at that.

Of course, the neat, old minute pic-
ture of the Moliere comedies is neither a
difficult nor an unbecoming gait for
any actress so highly artificialized as
this old favorite from the Comédie
Française.

As he glowered at Oronte one expected
him at any moment to break right
through the rice, precise classicism of
the verse and cry one in the provincial French, "I don't like that city
chap (type de la ville), mother. He
ain't done right by our Celimenes."

The Oronte, by the way, was Louis
Ravet, an excellent comedian of end-
less bounce and gusto. This is the
second and last week of these strolling
French players and they will have run
through their repertoire to-night when
they add another Moliere play—"Tar-
tuffe."

So here was a Célimène of prodig-

ious head-dresses, vast pinkish plumes
tying stoutly with violent diamant
and earrings that were veritable chan-
deliers. Here was a very windy dis-
play of gowns smothering a Célimène
that, except for a moment or two of
amorous languor, was content to pos-
ture a good deal and let it go at that.

Of course, the neat, old minute pic-
ture of the Moliere comedies is neither a
difficult nor an unbecoming gait for
any actress so highly artificialized as
this old favorite from the Comédie
Française.

As he glowered at Oronte one expected
him at any moment to break right
through the rice, precise classicism of
the verse and cry one in the provincial French, "I don't like that city
chap (type de la ville), mother. He
ain't done right by our Celimenes."

The Oronte, by the way, was Louis
Ravet, an excellent comedian of end-
less bounce and gusto. This is the
second and last week of these strolling
French players and they will have run
through their repertoire to-night when
they add another Moliere play—"Tar-
tuffe."

So here was a Célimène of prodig-

ious head-dresses, vast pinkish plumes
tying stoutly with violent diamant
and earrings that were veritable chan-
deliers. Here was a very windy dis-
play of gowns smothering a Célimène
that, except for a moment or two of
amorous languor, was content to pos-
ture a good deal and let it go at that.

Of course, the neat, old minute pic-
ture of the Moliere comedies is neither a
difficult nor an unbecoming gait for
any actress so highly artificialized as
this old favorite from the Comédie
Française.

As he glowered at Oronte one expected
him at any moment to break right
through the rice, precise classicism of
the verse and cry one in the provincial French, "I don't like that city
chap (type de la ville), mother. He
ain't done right by our Celimenes."

The Oronte, by the way, was Louis
Ravet, an excellent comedian of end-
less bounce and gusto. This is the
second and last week of these strolling
French players and they will have run
through their repertoire to-night when
they add another Moliere play—"Tar-
tuffe."

lous head-dresses, vast pinkish plumes
tying stoutly with violent diamant
and earrings that were veritable chan-
deliers. Here was a very windy dis-
play of gowns smothering a Célimène
that, except for a moment or two of
amorous languor, was content to pos-
ture a good deal and let it go at that.

Of course, the neat, old minute pic-
ture of the Moliere comedies is neither a
difficult nor an unbecoming gait for
any actress so highly artificialized as
this old favorite from the Comédie
Française.

Lambert presented an Alceste that
was a bit of a shock to those of us
who had been brought up in the
sedate traditions of the play. Here
was no glacial and fastidious Alceste
such as the older Gaitty embodied, but
a rough hewn, boyish, tempestuous
fellow, more bucolic than satiric and
giving much the impression of a le-
man, a good hearty man-from-home
nature's noblemen, turned loose in the
frigidities of Célimène's little salon.

As he glowered at Oronte one expected
him at any moment to break right
through the rice, precise classicism of
the verse and cry one in the provincial French, "I don't like that city
chap (type de la ville), mother. He
ain't done right by our Celimenes."

The Oronte, by the way, was Louis
Ravet, an excellent comedian of end-
less bounce and gusto. This is the
second and last week of these strolling
French players and they will have run
through their repertoire to-night when
they add another Moliere play—"Tar-
tuffe."

So here was a Célimène of prodig-

ious head-dresses, vast pinkish plumes
tying stoutly with violent diamant
and earrings that were veritable chan-
deliers. Here was a very windy dis-
play of gowns smothering a Célimène
that, except for a moment or two of
amorous languor, was content to pos-
ture a good deal and let it go at that.

Of course, the neat, old minute pic-
ture of the Moliere comedies is neither a
difficult nor an unbecoming gait for
any actress so highly artificialized as
this old favorite from the Comédie
Française.

As he glowered at Oronte one expected
him at any moment to break right
through the rice, precise classicism of
the verse and cry one in the provincial French, "I don't like that city
chap (type de la ville), mother. He
ain't done right by our Celimenes."

The Oronte, by the way, was Louis
Ravet, an excellent comedian of end-
less bounce and gusto. This is the
second and last week of these strolling
French players and they will have run
through their repertoire to-night when
they add another Moliere play—"Tar-
tuffe."

So here was a Célimène of prodig-

ious head-dresses, vast pinkish plumes
tying stoutly with violent diamant
and earrings that were veritable chan-
deliers. Here was a very windy dis-
play of gowns smothering a Célimène
that, except for a moment or two of
amorous languor, was content to pos-
ture a good deal and let it go at that.

Of course, the neat, old minute pic-
ture of the Moliere comedies is neither a
difficult nor an unbecoming gait for
any actress so highly artificialized as
this old favorite from the Comédie
Française.

As he glowered at Oronte one expected
him at any moment to break right
through the rice, precise classicism of
the verse and cry one in the provincial French, "I don't like that city
chap (type de la ville), mother. He
ain't done right by our Celimenes."

The Oronte, by the way, was Louis
Ravet, an excellent comedian of end-
less bounce and gusto. This is the
second and last week of these strolling
French players and they will have run
through their repertoire to-night when
they add another Moliere play—"Tar-
tuffe."

So here was a Célimène of prodig-

ious head-dresses, vast pinkish plumes
tying stoutly with violent diamant
and earrings that were veritable chan-
deliers. Here was a very windy dis-
play of gowns smothering a Célimène
that, except for a moment or two of
amorous languor, was content to pos-
ture a good deal and let it go at that.

Of course, the neat, old minute pic-
ture of the Moliere comedies is neither a
difficult nor an unbecoming gait for
any actress so highly artificialized as
this old favorite from the Comédie
Française.

As he glowered at Oronte one expected
him at any moment to break right
through the rice, precise classicism of
the verse and cry one in the provincial French, "I don't like that city
chap (type de la ville), mother. He
ain't done right by our Celimenes."

The Oronte, by the way, was Louis
Ravet, an excellent comedian of end-
less bounce and gusto. This is the
second and last week of these strolling
French players and they will have run
through their repertoire to-night when
they add another Moliere play—"Tar-
tuffe."

So here was a Célimène of prodig-

ious head-dresses, vast pinkish plumes
tying stoutly with violent diamant
and earrings that were veritable chan-
deliers. Here was a very windy dis-
play of gowns smothering a Célimène
that, except for a moment or two of
amorous languor, was content to pos-
ture a good deal and let it go at that.

Of course, the neat, old minute pic-
ture of the Moliere comedies is neither a
difficult nor an unbecoming gait for
any actress so highly artificialized as
this old favorite from the Comédie
Française.

As he glowered at Oronte one expected
him at any moment to break right
through the rice, precise classicism of
the verse and cry one in the provincial French, "I don't like that city
chap (type de la ville), mother. He
ain't done right by our Celimenes."

The Oronte, by the way, was Louis
Ravet, an excellent comedian of end-
less bounce and gusto. This is the
second and last week of these strolling
French players and they will have run
through their repertoire to-night when
they add another Moliere play—"Tar-
tuffe."

So here was a Célimène of prodig-

ious head-dresses, vast pinkish plumes
tying stoutly with violent diamant
and earrings that were veritable chan-
deliers. Here was a very windy dis-
play of gowns smothering a Célimène
that, except for a moment or two of
amorous languor, was content to pos-
ture a good deal and let it go at that.

Of course, the neat, old minute pic-
ture of the Moliere comedies is neither a
difficult nor an unbecoming gait for
any actress so highly artificialized as
this old favorite from the Comédie
Française.

As he glowered at Oronte one expected
him at any moment to break right
through the rice, precise classicism of
the verse and cry one in the provincial French, "I don't like that city
chap (type de la ville), mother. He
ain't done right by our Celimenes."

The Oronte, by the way, was Louis
Ravet, an excellent comedian of end-
less bounce and gusto. This is the
second and last week of these strolling
French players and they will have run
through their repertoire to-night when
they add another Moliere play—"Tar-
tuffe."

So here was a Célimène of prodig-

ious head-dresses, vast pinkish plumes
tying stoutly with violent diamant
and earrings that were veritable chan-
deliers. Here was a very windy dis-
play of gowns smothering a Célimène
that, except for a moment or two of
amorous languor, was content to pos-
ture a good deal and let it go at that.

Of course, the neat, old minute pic-
ture of the Moliere comedies is neither a
difficult nor an unbecoming gait for
any actress so highly artificialized as
this old favorite from the Comédie
Française.

As he glowered at Oronte one expected
him at any moment to break right
through the rice, precise classicism of
the verse and cry one in the provincial French, "I don't like that city
chap (type de la ville), mother. He
ain't done right by our Celimenes."

The Oronte, by the way, was Louis
Ravet, an excellent comedian of end-
less bounce and gusto. This is the
second and last week of these strolling
French players and they will have run
through their repertoire to-night when
they add another Moliere play—"Tar-
tuffe."

So here was a Célimène of prodig-

ious head-dresses, vast pinkish plumes
tying stoutly with violent diamant
and earrings that were veritable chan-
deliers. Here was a very windy dis-
play of gowns smothering a Célimène
that, except for a moment or two of
amorous languor, was content to pos-
ture a good deal and let it go at that.

Of course, the neat, old minute pic-
ture of the Moliere comedies is neither a
difficult nor an unbecoming gait for
any actress so highly artificialized as
this old favorite from the Comédie
Française.

As he glowered at Oronte one expected
him at any moment to break right
through the rice, precise classicism of
the verse and cry one in the provincial French, "I don't like that city
chap (type de la ville), mother. He
ain't done right by our Celimenes."

The Oronte, by the way, was Louis
Ravet, an excellent comedian of end-
less bounce and gusto. This is the
second and last week of these strolling
French players and they will have run
through their repertoire to-night when
they add another Moliere play—"Tar-
tuffe."

So here was a Célimène of prodig-